AUDITORIUM IS DESTROYED

Fire Takes One of Globe's
Playhouses Early on New Year's Morning.

ALMOST IN RUINS BEFORE ALARM GIVEN

Building Erected Last Summer and the Total Loss Is $5,600.
Partly Insured—Origin of the Blaze Is Unknown.

Shortly after three o'clock yesterday morning fire was discovered in the Auditorium theatre at the foot of Cedar street, before the fire department could be called the building was practically in ruins. The wind which was blowing a gale all night had moderated somewhat and other buildings in the vicinity would have been destroyed.

The building was erected last summer by Messrs. Kemp and Shuck and with the machinery and other effects in the house, it represented an outlay of $5,600. The insurance on the place was $2,500 so that the proprietors suffered a severe loss. The season at the Auditorium had scarcely opened so that the loss is much greater than if it had had a source of revenue since it was constructed.

No reason can be assigned for the origin of the fire. There was a ball at the Auditorium New Year's Eve, and on account of the shutdown at the power house, oil lamps and candles were used to light the hall. Manager Kemp states that all the lights had been extinguished when the house was closed shortly after one o'clock and that he is unable to account for the fire.

FIRST RESULT FUEL FAMINE

Globe felt its first touch of the fuel famine Monday night and New Year's eve the city was in darkness, save for an occasional kerosene lamp or lighted candles which glowed throughout the business district, where dependence had been placed in the gas or electric plant. It was not until evening that it was known that there was to be neither electricity or gas, and the lack of both caused considerable inconvenience. Probably the most serious inconvenience caused was to the Silver Belt as, the paper being dependent upon both gas and electricity for linotype and presses, it was impossible to issue a paper Tuesday morning. Yesterday seven cars of oil were received for the Old Dominion Mining & Smelting company and a car of this supply was loaned the Gas & Electric company. Electricity was generated last night but owing to a breakdown of a pump the gas manufactory could not be operated. The company promises to have both electricity and gas this evening.

W. D. Booth of Jerome, Ariz., is a business visitor in town.

The Clock's Tick

"Not all people," said the jeweler, "like the ticking of a clock. It is a pleasant sound to most people, but not to all. Some people, clock lovers these, couldn't sleep without a clock in the same room. Its ticking is company, and it scares away the spooks. Such people would wake up if the clock should stop in the middle of the night. But there are other people who can't sleep with a clock in the same room and who, if they found themselves in a strange place anywhere with a clock in their sleeping apartment, would stop the clock before they went to bed. Of course there is much of habit in this, but we have our fancies about clocks, as we do about all things else."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

All Out of the Same Barrel

Three Americans travelling in the French provinces thought at dinner that they would go a little higher than the vin ordinaire included in their three franc table d'hôte, and accordingly ordered a bottle of Margaux, the second ordered Pontet Canet, and the third ordered Haut Brion. The waiter, suitably impressed with these orders, retired, but he incautiously as he retired left the door open, and thus it was that the three stupefied guests heard him give their order in these terms: "Baptiste, three bottles of the red." Argonaut.

Brilliant Boy

"Can you stand on your head?" asked a visitor of little Dudley.

"No," he replied. "It's too high up."

To grief there is a limit; not so to fear.—Penny the Younger.

Black Wolf's Bad Heart

(Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Sutcliffe.)
The Cheyennes had fought the white soldiers for fifteen years. Chief Walk-by-Night had started out in the belief that there were only about 5,000 white men in all America, and as soon as he could get them together he would finish them off, but after many years he came to have a better understanding.

When the first blades of green grass were seen on the southern hillside word was sent out to the subchiefs to gather in council. All responded but Black Wolf. He was a fiery tempered young man of twenty-five. It had so happened that he and his band had taken all the scalps gathered in during the year past, and he was ambitious, fierce and a great hunter. He wanted war all the time. He had plans to round up all the white soldiers and make a grand feast of them. Let the Cheyennes perform some daring deed and they might count on an alliance with at least three other tribes. Black Wolf claimed to be ill and asked for a few days' delay.

On the bluffs on the north bank of Medicine creek the white soldiers were building a fort. It was within the Cheyenne territory and was another insult to them. Black Wolf had seen the men at work the previous fall. During the winter work would have been suspended, but now that spring had come the white men would be busy again, and again the white topped wagons would roll across the plains. Those wagons, as he knew, contained flour, meat, firearms, powder and bullets, blankets, cooking utensils, clothing and many other things needed by his tribe. If he could run off five or six of them, with perhaps half a hundred mules and horses, the wealth of the tribe would be restored twice over. The feat would be a daring one, and one to challenge admiration and bring about alliances. Walk-by-Night would no longer cover his face and talk of peace, but his voice would be for war and his face painted to strike terror to the hearts of his enemies.

It was a golden opportunity for Black Wolf. He had less than fifty warriors in his band, but all were enthusiastic and sure of success. It was a ride of seventy-five miles from the camp to the bluffs where the fort was building, but this was less than two days' ride, even on the half starved ponies. The medicine men made his medicine and pronounced it good, and away rode the young men. The soldiers were busy, and a wagon train was crawling over the plains. The Indians could not have asked for the situation to be bettered. They lost little time in pushing in. The last six wagons were cut off by a brilliant dash, seven of the escort killed and the six drivers saved to be tortured at the stake later on. The soldiers turned out from the new fort and gave chase, but were beaten back. Six double mule teams and twelve led horses were among the fruits of the capture, and under the covers of the wagons was wealth beyond compare.

That was a proud moment for Black Wolf when he brought his prisoners and plunder safe to the main camp. He also had his little speech ready.

"I have heard it said that the Cheyennes had become a tribe of women," he said. "With forty-two warriors I have captured what you see before you. Let that be the answer. I have heard it whispered that we must make peace and go upon the reservation to escape hunger and cold. In the wagons here are enough food and blankets to last us for years. If forty-two of us have done this, what cannot 1,000 of us do? There are 500 white men at the new fort. Are we to leave them in peace, or are their scalps to hang on our lodges?"

All this and a heap more was said by Black Wolf before he was through with his speech, and he carried the crowd with him. Walk-by-Night concluded that he had made a big mistake and straightway repented of it, while the squaws chanted and the warriors bragged and swaggered. The village now numbered 800 people. Some of the bands had not yet come in. Five of the wagons were unloaded, and the hopes of the redskins were more than realized. There were pork, beef, sugar, coffee and flour by the barrel. There were bacon, hard tack, beans, peas, rice and tobacco. The six wagons were in the center of the village. The stuff taken from the five made a great heap. The contents of the sixth were left for inspection on the morrow.

By and by, when all speeches had been concluded, hunger satisfied and the crowd had got hold of enough whiskey to give everybody a whooping old time, some of the younger bucks began firing their guns. One of the teamsters called out to them and tried to explain something. He was given a slap on the face, and the revel went on. Ten minutes later one of the bullets fired by a mad dancer penetrated the box of the wagon, and there instantly followed an explosion that shook the earth for thirty miles around. It had been the last wagon in the train. It was loaded with dynamite for blasting down a portion of the bluffs. The blast struck the hills to the west and came back to strike those on the east. It dug a hole in the earth thirty feet deep and a hundred feet long. It sent hundreds of bodies high in air, and it flung hundreds of others about like feathers.

Walk-by-Night was dead. Black Wolf was dead. One Horn and Great Thunder were dead. The power of the tribe was broken forever, and the soldiers even whispered the miserable remnant that came crawling in and asked to be put on a reservation and clothed and fed. Black Wolf's ambition had done the trick.
